

Postdoctoral Position in Immunology

A postdoctoral position is available starting April 1st or later in the laboratory of Dr. Clint Robbins at the Toronto General Research Institute. The postdoctoral fellow will study the function of tissue resident macrophage populations in health and disease.

Requirements: Candidates will have an MD and/or Ph.D. and a background in molecular and/or cellular immunology. Experience in macrophage biology is preferred, but not necessary. The successful candidate must be highly motivated and independent, possess good verbal and written communications skills, and have a good track record of scientific accomplishments (including publications in peer-reviewed journals).

Applicants should respond by email with a curriculum vitae and brief description of research interests to Dr. Clint Robbins (clint.robbins@utoronto.ca).
